

SECRET

reports favored a re-oriented IR, criticizing not the functions but the procedures. 45

25X1A

The result was that the Industrial Register ceased as an entity on

9 September 1963 and a new Foreign Installations Branch (FIB) with a complement of [REDACTED] 25X1A

[REDACTED] positions went to SR to support an all-source center, and [REDACTED] positions were 25X1A abolished, accounting for the former IR total of [REDACTED] was established in SR. The principal recommendations of the various studies were met by ^{the} shift, ~~to~~ to provide all-source service and improve OCR/requester communication. The shift required establishing new file criteria so that the file base ^{to make} was all-source. ~~There was~~ Another net advantage, ^{was achieved by FIB with} collocating ^{and} several high priority, inter-related functions with selected ORR, CGS, ^{of} NPIC and ~~OCR~~ components in the Special Center, ⁴⁶ (^{sep} ~~the~~ Organization ^{Chart #3} OCR, December 1963 on page following).

ILLEGIB

FIB immediately began an extensive file refinement program to 25X1B incorporate the new priorities as its processing criteria. Initially, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] dossiers were amalgamated with over

[REDACTED] and additional files from other Agency components were also merged. A continuing effort was begun to reduce the number of installations covered and to improve the extent and quality 25X1B of information maintained, the goal being to get down to about [REDACTED] world-wide. FIB became operational on 1 May 1964. 47 It was re-designated as the Foreign Installations Division in September 1966, and disappeared as ^{a separately} entity in the major reorganization of OCR on 7 July 1967. ^{Its functions were} continued but separated by area in the new all-source

CIA Library Processing ^{geographic divisions}

The processing of intelligence documents by the CIA Library,

Machine Division and later the Document Division was described early in this chapter under The Intellofax System. The purchase and borrowing of unclassified publications by the CIA Library was discussed in Chapter V. An element of this processing not

SECRET